MANNENBERG

The musical piece for the processional march is Mannenberg, composed by Abdullah Ibrahim.

Recorded with Basil 'Manenberg' Coetzee, Paul Michaels, Robbie Jansen, Morris Goldberg and Monty Weber, Mannenberg was released in June 1974.

The piece was composed against the backdrop of the District Six forced removals. It is named after the Cape Town township of Manenberg, which was established when the residents of District Six settled there. Mannenberg stands out as a uniquely South African piece: it blends together South African musical forms (marabi, mbaqanga and langarm) and American jazz. The song became a rallying cry against the injustices of apartheid and the particular destruction it wrought on communities. With its upbeat melodies and buoyant hook, the piece also serves a celebration of the resilience and endurance of humanity in the face of the brutalities of the apartheid regime.

Mannenberg is arguably South African jazz's most famous export, and still stands as an anthem of hope and of fortitude for oppressed communities. It also serves as a reminder of the inhumanity of what this country and this city endured, and of the legacies of that inhumanity.

DISTINCTIONS IN THE FACULTY OF COMMERCE

The BCom and BBusSc degrees may be awarded with distinction in a subject, where the student achieves a weighted average of at least 75% in a group of courses in, or related to, that subject (in some cases the average mark required is 80%) in the degree, where the student achieves a weighted average of 80% in all courses.

Honours degrees are awarded by class of pass (first, second class division one, second class division two, or third).

Master's degrees may be awarded with distinction for the dissertation, (in a coursework and dissertation curriculum) for especially meritorious work, the dissertation being in the first class (at least 75%) and at least 70% for the coursework depending on the degree.

HONORARY DEGREE RECIPIENT

Francis Aylmer Hunter Wilson
DLitt (honoris causa)

Francis Aylmer Hunter Wilson returned to UCT from his PhD in Cambridge, and in 1971 and 1972 published three immensely influential pieces of research: in 1971 “Farming 1866-1966”, a chapter in the Oxford History of South Africa; in 1972, “Labour in the South African Gold Mines 1911-1969”, and a book, “Migrant Labour in South Africa”. These works tell the terrible social consequences of the story of the migrant labour system. Over time his contribution broadened to a focus on understanding how these processes and others underwrite poverty in South Africa.

In 1974 Wilson launched the Southern Africa Labour and Development Research Unit (SALDRU). SALDRU provided a home for activist scholars and shaped many young scholars who went on to produce significant work and take leadership positions. In 1982 Francis Wilson was asked to direct the 2nd Carnegie Inquiry into Poverty & Development in South Africa, a massive independent research process with SALDRU serving as the base institution. This collective effort presented a formidable and graphic documentation of the impoverishment black South Africans endured under apartheid. In 1993 Wilson and SALDRU, in partnership with the World Bank, worked on a survey to produce baseline evidence of the state of the nation, which was widely used in the 1990s for policy formulation.

Wilson also recognised the imperative to build the capacity of South Africans to analyse their data and to undertake their policy analysis. With others he set up capacity building initiatives that run to this day.

Francis Wilson’s influence and reputation have endured post-retirement. In 2012, he was tasked with organising a conference to launch a national Inquiry into Strategies to overcome poverty and inequality. This event was subtitled “Towards Carnegie 3”.

Professor Francis Wilson’s distinguished contributions to scholarship and the manner in which he has used scholarship to fight for social policies that are evidence-informed have modelled an academic life committed to rigorous, relevant, critical research, engaged scholarship and social justice. For this, we honour him.

Bertha Chipo Bangara
Thesis Title: Macroeconomic dynamics in low income economies

Bertha Chipo Bangara holds a BSocSc in Economics from the University of Malawi, and an MSc in International and Development Economics from the Australian National University. She is a Policy and Business Reforms Officer in the Ministry of Industry and Trade (Malawi) and joined UCT in 2011 as a PhD student in the School of Economics.

Bertha Bangara's thesis examines the dynamic effects of commodity concentration and foreign-exchange constraints on key macroeconomic variables in low-income economies. Using tobacco in Malawi as a case study, she finds that a positive price shock increases gross domestic product, reduces consumer prices and strengthens the real exchange rate. She then examines the effects of foreign exchange shortages on an import-dependent economy, finding that, while imports influence domestic output and consumption, increasing imports in an effort to increase productivity can be counter-productive and weaken the real exchange rate. Lastly, she examines the dynamic effects of government financing behaviour in a foreign-exchange constrained economy when agents are Ricardian. Unusually, she finds that consumption, wages and labour supply increase when government consumption increases, because government expenditure in most low-income economies is financed by aid and debt. A positive aid shock improves the macroeconomic environment of the economy and eases the foreign-exchange constraints pressures.

Godfrey Charles Cadogan
Thesis Title: Essays on statistical economics with applications to financial market instability, limit distribution of loss aversion, and harmonic probability weighting functions

Godfrey Charles Cadogan has a BSc in Actuarial Mathematics, BSc in Mathematical Statistics, and MSc in Mathematical Statistics from University of Michigan.

Godfrey Charles Cadogan's thesis contains four essays. These introduce new statistical models of economics and financial decision-making under risk, as follows: the first proves that the loss aversion index in behavioural economics is not constant, but is a random variable that admits any positive number. This was tested empirically in several different contexts and upheld. It generates the first known economic time-series for loss aversion compared to extant survey-based measures, providing new insights into the stochastic discount factor in asset pricing models. The second introduces a probabilistic model of financial market instability caused by irrational exuberance in financial markets. It provides robust early warning systems for financial market crashes across different credit risk sources. The third explains why decision makers' preference orderings change, proving that decision makers' broken probability cycles cause preference reversal. The fourth disproves behavioural economists' perception that Bernoulli's utility function is unable to generate a loss-aversion index, and solves the open problem of a global loss-aversion index and introduces a statistical test for it.

Christine Selina Makanza
Thesis Title: Current account dynamics and macroeconomic policy

Christine Makanza has a BSc (Honours) and MSc in Economics from the University of Zimbabwe. Her PhD research emerged from her interest in the macroeconomic instability faced by many emerging markets and low-income economies, in particular the large current account deficits that normally characterise these economies.

Christine Makanza's thesis focuses on the growing current account imbalances of emerging market economies, and the influence of macroeconomic policy on these imbalances. She establishes the usefulness of both fiscal policy and monetary policy in the stabilisation of the external balance by providing an understanding of the monetary and fiscal determinants of the current account at both domestic and global levels, and the usefulness of macroeconomic policy in managing these imbalances. She further considers the structure of most emerging and low income economies in terms of the share of traded goods vis-à-vis non-traded goods in production and consumption, and develops a Dynamic Stochastic General Equilibrium model that analyses the role of non-traded goods in the determination of the current account. Her model not only analyses the relevance of non-traded goods in the determination of the current account, but provides a framework for understanding the external balance in small open economies.

Dale Siamulandabala Mudenda
Thesis Title: Economic reforms and product market integration in developing countries: an empirical investigation using retail prices in Zambia

Dale Mudenda holds a BA (Economics) from the University of Zambia, and an MA (Economics) from the University of Malawi. He has lectured at the University of Zambia.

His thesis uses newly-obtained micro-price and tariff data to analyse the influence of trade costs, tariff reform and tradability on the internal dispersion of retail prices in Zambia. It draws on highly disaggregated tariff data to analyse how far Zambia has opened up to external competition, and uses regional product-price data to estimate how integrated product markets are in Zambia. The thesis analyses the influence of tariff reforms on product market integration within the economy and extends the literature on the determinants of market segmentation within African countries by focusing on the roles of ethnic diversity and income inequality which it uses to explain the presence of large and persistent trade costs inhibiting the integration of product markets. Although trade reform has facilitated greater product market integration in Zambia, the effect has been greater in regions more exposed to international trade or along main transport routes. The thesis emphasises the need for policy makers to reduce internal barriers if the gains from trade are to be fully realised across the entire economy.

Lwanga Elizabeth Nanziri
Thesis Title: Financial literacy, use of finance and welfare in post-apartheid South Africa

Lwanga Elizabeth Nanziri has a BA and MA from Makerere University in Uganda. Her PhD research emerged as a result of her engagement with users of formal financial products while at the South African Savings Institute, where she has been an Executive Director since 2008.

The Financial Access policy of post-apartheid South Africa aimed at reducing poverty and inequality. Lwanga Elizabeth Nanziri's thesis makes a contribution to evaluating the success of this policy and others like it in countries whose formal financial sector coexists with sophisticated informal financial mechanisms. The thesis builds on capability theory to construct a measure of financial literacy and then uses this index to show that financial literacy plays a significant role in facilitating the use of formal financial products. If used properly, financial products can improve the welfare of users through wealth accumulation and improved well-being. Lwanga Elizabeth Nanziri constructs objective and subjective measures of welfare to establish that there are welfare differences between the services provided by formal financial products versus and competing non-formal financial products.

*Alexander O'Riordan
Thesis Title: Country programmable aid: differences, divergences and contradictions between donor aid strategies and beneficiary country development plans

Alexander O'Riordan has a BSocSc (Hons) and an MSocSc from the University of KwaZulu-Natal. His PhD thesis emerged from his working experience advising international donors on their country aid strategies.

Alexander O'Riordan's thesis contributes to the literature on international donor aid programming, especially in the context of country programmable aid, EU joint programming and donor country strategy. The analysis compares and contrasts international donors' stated policies on 'country programmable aid' with actual results. It examines the relationship between the donor country's strategies and the beneficiary country's national development plans, and the extent to which donors use political economy, sector and context analysis. The key findings are that possibly predictable patterns in how donors programme their aid at country level are not explained by the context nor accounted for in the beneficiary country's national development plan. These patterns relate to the decontextualisation of aid, accompanied by a narrative of donor superiority, both moral and technological, and overly-ambitious objectives. The findings imply that these patterns are predictable because they result from implicit rules governing the process of aid allocation by donors, rather than the recipient countries' contexts and requirements.

Mahawiya Sulemana
Thesis Title: Foreign banking inflows, financial sector development and economic growth in ECOWAS and SADC

Mahawiya Sulemana holds a Teacher's Certificate "A" from Bagabaga College of Education, as well as a BA (Hons) in Economics and Geography and an MA in Economics from Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology. He lectured at Garden City University College and Kumasi Polytechnic and joined the UCT School of Economics in 2011 as a PhD student.

Mahawiya Sulemana's thesis examines the impacts of financial development, foreign banking inflows, inflation, trade and financial openness in ECOWAS and SADC. He constructs a composite measure of financial development and demonstrates that while financial system development is important for economic growth in both regions, its effects is greater in SADC, although, democratic development helps financial development induce growth more in ECOWAS. An examination of underlying reasons of the underdevelopment of financial systems shows that inflation negatively affects financial sector development especially in ECOWAS. Increased access to communication infrastructure benefits financial development, especially in SADC countries, which also benefit more from simultaneous opening of trade and the financial sector. Finally, he examines the relationship between foreign banking inflows and the likelihood of banking crises and financial system instability, finding that, in both regions, increases in foreign banking reduce the probability of financial instability, while financial openness and increases in credit raise it.

Janine Joubert
Thesis Title: Embed risk management within new product and service development of an innovation and risk management framework and supporting risk processes, for effective risk mitigation: an action research study within the Information and Communication Technology (ICT) Sector

Janine Joubert holds a BCom(Hons) and an MCom in Information Systems from UCT. Her PhD research resulted from her work as an innovation risk manager at one of the continent's largest mobile telecommunications company.

Janine Joubert's research assesses how to embed risk management within the innovation divisions of an organisation to ensure more efficient delivery of products and services to customers. Innovation is a complex organisational process, and risk management needs the flexibility to accommodate very diverse needs and risks. Action research was conducted in a large multinational company operating in a high-technology environment that launches many diverse products and services to both consumers and business partners. The study took several years to complete and delivered multiple interventions that successfully embedded risk management within the organisation, leading to changed behaviours and double-loop learning. The action research's major output is an academically grounded and empirically validated Innovation and Risk Management Framework (IRMF) which can guide new product and service development by considering best practices and risks. Janine Joubert also developed an innovative risk dashboard to consolidate the knowledge generated during the study and to serve as a visual interface in support of stage-gate decision making.

*Tibuhinda Tibenderana Ngonzi
Thesis Title: Theorizing ICT-based social innovation on development in the context of developing countries of Africa

Tibuhinda Ngonzi has a BA from the University of Dar es Salaam, a postgraduate diploma from Goa University, and an MBA from Uganda Martyrs University. His PhD thesis is motivated by a desire to explain the relationships between the long-term socio-economic impacts of ICT.

Tibuhinda Ngonzi's thesis develops and refines a theory that shows how ICTs can influence the social transformation to an 'all-inclusive information society' and how they can be fully used to drive development in developing countries. His theory extends a conceptual framework that embraces economic bases, social value systems, and social contexts both for individuals and the state. The theory, based on the capabilities approach, can be used to guide national innovation policies and strategies, and social innovation machineries, in developing countries.

VALUES OF THE UNIVERSITY

The University is a community of scholars, teachers, students and staff. A community implies the shared acceptance by its members of common values. The concept of values implies not only rights but also obligations, for the community itself and for its individual members.

This statement of values provides a framework that informs and governs what is considered by the University community to be appropriate and acceptable behavior. The statement also serves as the foundation for a range of University policies and guides the management of particular aspects of University life.

As a community, the University commits itself, and expects all its members, to exemplify and uphold these values and to reflect them not only in institutional and personal relationships, but also in all other aspects of University life, including work, sport, recreation, and cultural, intellectual, religious and other activities.

As a values-based community, we aspire to an encompassing ethos which

- promotes academic excellence and the attainment of the institutional goal of becoming a world-class African University;
- preserves what is valuable in the history of the institution and of this country, and responds to the challenges posed by past injustices and unfair discrimination;
- achieves social transformation, empowerment and participative governance;
- affirms and protects the fundamental human rights enshrined in the Constitution; and
- encourages the institution and all its members to accept responsibility for the welfare of the community and for behaving in accordance with these community values

VALUES

We commit ourselves to

- truth, fairness, consistency, and integrity in both academic and other work, and in all personal and institutional relationships;
- compassion, generosity and concern for the needs and aspirations of others, and in particular for the challenges faced by the less privileged in our society;
- respect and tolerance for cultural, religious, political, and other differences and acknowledgement of the value of diversity in society;
- respect for individual privacy, dignity, and the right to personal choice;
- intellectual honesty, rigour in debate, openness to alternative ideas and respect for other views, beliefs and opinions;
- commitment to high standards, personal fulfillment and the pursuit of excellence;
- the protection and responsible use of the University's assets and resources;
- concern for the personal safety, health and welfare of all members of the community; and
- the protection and conservation of the environment and our natural resources.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

Founded as the South African College (a boys' school that aimed to provide higher education as well) in 1829, the University was established as the University of Cape Town in 1918.

The early history was one of great expectations and hard times and it was not until the early years of the twentieth century that the University was developed into a fully-fledged tertiary institution. A significant and pioneering development in the 19th century was the admission of women as degree students in 1886, many years ahead of most universities in the world.

At the start of the 20th century the University incorporated the Diocesan College, the teacher training classes of the Normal College, the South African College of Music and the Cape Town Schools of Fine Art and Architecture.

The Medical School was established and in the 1920s the University began a partnership with the local health authority (now the Provincial Government's health department) that saw the Medical School move from the Hiddingh Campus and the Green Point Somerset Hospital to Observatory (the rest of UCT's Upper Campus moved from Hiddingh to its present site, on part of Cecil Rhodes' estate, in 1928). This partnership allowed for the construction of the first Groote Schuur Hospital on a University site. The partnership continues to this day and now involves not only Groote Schuur as a teaching hospital but Red Cross Children's Hospital, Valkenberg and a growing number of primary health care sites.

The period between the end of World War II and 1994 was marked by two themes. Firstly, the University recognised that if it was to be fully South African, it would have to move beyond academic non-segregation to be fully inclusive. It would have to face the consequential and increasing clashes with a government determined to legislate for segregation and enforce the doctrine of apartheid. And secondly, the University intended to transform into a leading research institution.

Before World War II, the University was largely a teaching university and its students were mostly undergraduates. The research undertaken was sporadic, though in some cases notable. A research committee was appointed for the first time in 1945. The next 75 years saw a great expansion of research and scholarly work such that the UCT of 2014 has a greater proportion of highly rated researchers and gains significantly more research grants and awards than any other South African University.

The 1980s and 1990s were characterized by the deliberate and planned transformation of the student body. This was aided by the establishment of the Academic Development Programme aimed at helping students from disadvantaged educational and social backgrounds to succeed and the desegregation of student residences. As a result, a student body that was 90% white in 1979, when UCT marked its 150th anniversary, is in 2014 more than 50% black. The total student enrolment of just above 26 000, includes international students drawn from over 100 countries, a significant proportion of which are from SADC states. Particular emphasis is placed on postgraduate studies and more than 20% of these students will be enrolled in master's and doctoral programmes. A growing number of postdoctoral fellows contribute substantially to the research endeavours and reputation of the University (UCT has more than a third of the total number of post docs in South Africa).

UCT continues to work towards its goal to be Africa's leading research university. Its success can be measured by the scope of study it offers and the calibre of its graduates.

Welcome, Wamkelekile, Welkom – today is not the end of your relationship with the university but the beginning of a new phase in your continuing relationship with UCT, one that you share with the UCT community of over 100 000 alumni.

Diverse as this community is, the shared experiences of a critical academic ethos and a spectacular campus make for a strong network that has a wide footprint, not only in South Africa, but across the continent and the globe.

We set a great store by our links with our alumni, and indeed the links alumni have with each other. We promise that we will be in touch, and ask you in turn to let us know not only your current contact details but also, from time to time, something of your lives and where you are in your careers.

*Updates can be done on the web – <http://www.uct.ac.za/dad/alumni/update/>
- or by writing to the Alumni Office, UCT, PB X3 Rondebosch 7701 or by contacting us on (27) (21) 650 3746.*

*Your alma mater looks forward to welcoming you back, whether to a public lecture, a leadership forum, your class reunion,
or just an informal call!*
